Summer of Demolition Continues as Three Buildings Disappear

Tremors could be felt as the old North Hall, Physical Sciences and Chemistry buildings were being demolished – only weeks after holding their final classes in the spring 2011 semester.

Heavy equipment began to dismantle the buildings after the July 4th holiday with the goal of having all three buildings razed and the debris removed from campus prior to August 12, 2011.

Removal of the old buildings creates a new vista for the campus. For the first time a direct line of sight is possible between the AD/SS and Campus Center. The Auditorium and Observatory are the only two remaining buildings that will remain within the seismic fault of the fold zone.

Campus construction continues with a number of new projects funded through the Measure M bond program. Upcoming projects include:

- A comprehensive ADA improvement project to provide better access for people with disabilities using campus sidewalks.
- A much-needed signage system to simplify campus way-finding and provide better information for the campus community and visitors.

- Renovation of the Business Building
- Construction of a new Central Plant
- Planning efforts on the new PE and Athletics facilities and Auditorium renovations

This has been a busy summer with numerous projects undertaken and completed. A large number of deferred maintenance projects, such as parking lot striping and tree trimming, were completed in June. The soccer field was leveled and reseeded to be ready for the return of the soccer team in August. Lastly, the exterior of the Liberal Arts and Technology buildings were painted in anticipation of fall classes.

Access Granted: Getting to SBVC Has Never Been Easier

Starting this fall, SBVC students may be paying higher enrollment fees of $36 per unit due to the state budget crisis, but two new initiatives on the campus will ease the pain of the increased fees by providing free rides to campus with Omnitrans bus services and free parking across Mt. Vernon Avenue at the Pro Swap Meet.

For several years, the Pro Swap Meet parking lots have been available as overflow parking for SBVC students, staff and faculty with a valid parking decal. Beginning with the fall 2011 semester, parking at the Pro Swap Meet will be free without the need for a parking decal.

More details on both initiatives are available at www.valleycollege.edu.

Dr. Frank Bruno Continues His Teaching Legacy

Retired faculty member (and SBVC alum), Dr. Frank Bruno, who racked up more than 40 years of teaching, continues to serve as an adjunct faculty member at SBVC. Dr. Bruno has also been busy on the speaking circuit. In May he spoke at the San Bernardino Rotary club. The informal title of his presentation was “Me Tarzan, You Jane.” The more formal subtitle was “Nine Communication Skills.” In his discussion he examined the essential skills designed to enhance human relationships. As if that were not enough, Dr. Bruno has published a novel through Amazon.com. The book can be downloaded on the Kindle as an e-book and is also available in hard copy. The title of the novel is Twinsouls. It is a science-fiction novel about a doppelganger. In German lore, a doppelganger is a ghostly double, usually malevolent, who seeks to steal the primary person’s identity. Frank is using Twitter to publicize the novel. To see some of his tweets, go to twitter.com/fjbpsychologist. The tweets are mostly about psychology, literature, and film.

Alumni Profile-Ray Zacarias: From Prison to a Master’s Degree

Ray Zacarias didn’t think about attending college when he was growing up in San Bernardino. Ray, now 41 and living in Covina, was just trying to survive his childhood. He witnessed domestic violence between his parents that led him to taking drugs and alcohol as a teen and culminated in a prison sentence as an adult for armed robbery.

The challenges he faced as a child began taking a toll on Ray when he started middle school in San Bernardino. One of five children, Ray said his three older siblings were out of the house when he and younger brother, Daniel, saw the physical abuse of their mother, Julia, by their father, Edmundo. That fear led Ray to start using marijuana and alcohol as a teen.

“In the beginning, it was just like once in a while,” said Ray. “But when I got to high school, it was pretty regular.”

Ray dropped out of San Bernardino High School his senior year and became a father of his only child, Anthony, 24. Two years later, he had joint custody of Anthony and was working as a meat cutter at Stater Bros. He tried to stay clean and sober for a year but entered rehab at Pine Ridge Outpatient Center in San Bernardino.

“I learned that I wasn’t alone,” said Ray. “I’m not the only one who has a drug or drinking problem.”

Ray said he quit his job at Stater Bros. because he was afraid the company might fire him. He also got involved in gangs and did a variety of jobs to maintain his drug habit. One of the worst days of his life, he said, was in 1997. He was high on drugs and was arrested for armed robbery in front of his childhood home in San Bernardino.

Ray spent more than four years in prison. He was released in May 2001 and placed on three years of high control parole. His brother Richard offered him a place to live in Moreno Valley and he worked in a warehouse for Monster Energy drinks.

Six months after being released from prison, Ray started drinking again. This time, he faced an ultimatum from his parole officer – go back to prison or attend a meeting of Narcotics Anonymous. Ray chose the latter. In October 2002, he also was introduced to the Salvation Army in Moreno Valley.

“I took a look at everything going on in my life and I had nothing to lose because I had lost everything,” he said.

He literally had to re-learn how to live, thanks to tools from the Salvation Army. Then he moved into transitional housing for 18 months at a Salvation Army facility in San Bernardino.

Ray discovered SBVC through friends and started taking classes so he could earn a degree in alcohol/drug counseling. He became an ambassador for Clyde Williams, outreach technician for the SBVC Outreach and Recruitment Office, which provides information about SBVC to prospective students.

Clean and sober for the past eight years, Ray has earned two associate degrees from SBVC, including one in Alcohol/Drug Studies, a bachelor’s degree in Social Work from California State University, San Bernardino and his master’s degree in Social Work from USC.

Eight years after enrolling at SBVC, Ray has seen his life transformed as a college graduate with four degrees. He was recently promoted from a case manager for 14-25 year-olds to Associate Vice-President of Programs at Communities In Schools, a nationwide program aimed at keeping kids in school. He will be a site coordinator at a charter school in Pacoima.

“Every opportunity I get, I talk to people on how education can really transform your life,” said Ray. “There’s nothing in life that I take for granted.”

Student Services Updates for Summer 2011

Foster & Kinship Care Education (FKCE) Program: The FKCE program completed its 2010-2011 program by offering 219 classes. Although the target population is mainly foster parents and relative caregivers, its training is open to everyone in the community including social workers, group home staff, and other professionals who work with children. This past year the FKCE program served 1582 participants, of which 506 were unduplicated. The goal of the FKCE program is to continue to offer classes which support children and the families who care for them.

SBVC Financial Aid Awards Statistical Data Update: 18,738 FAFSA applications have been received for the new 2011-2012 academic year. The new 2011-2012 award letters will be generated and mailed out to eligible students beginning July 18th. The first fall 2011 financial aid disbursement is scheduled for August 11th.

Disabled Student Programs & Services (DSP&S): One week before priority registration, the Deaf/Hard of Hearing (D/HH) students were gathered in a workshop to prep for the fall 2011 semester. Most important was to communicate to the D/HH students their responsibilities in using the interpreters. They also discussed scheduling classes to be interpreted and how to register in an efficient manner.

Priority registration occurred in a flurry of activity. On June 30th, students were lined up to be seen by Kathi Pryor, Marty Milligan, Diana Holmes, or Michelle Crocfer. For many students, it was their first time seeing a DSP&S counselor which added to the long line of students. DSP&S was proactive and reserved a classroom with 20 computers in anticipation of the deluge of students wanting to register for fall 2011. However, most students had difficulties with the new Web Advisor and registration system, which required more staff time than available.

Student Health Services: Student Health Services has been busy this summer preparing to provide immunizations and physicals to the Psychiatric Technician and Nursing students, learning the new student medical records scheduling system Pyramed, and planning health promotion offerings such as the health fair and a variety of seminars for the fall.
